GET BRITAIN BUILDING

New campaign to boost British construction

Politicians from all parties and construction industry representatives have united to help kick start the ailing construction industry, which is suffering its worse recession since 1980. The result is “Get Britain Building” – the biggest coalition in the building industry’s history.

The “Get Britain Building” campaign is demanding that the Government supports its Ten Point Manifesto to get Britain building again and save hundreds of thousands of jobs in the construction industry.

The Get Britain Building Manifesto wants the Government to create a new business environment framework in which the construction companies can work. The Manifesto includes a plea to get banks lending to small businesses again; a government strategy to refurbish the country’s 26 million homes to make them more energy efficient; and a cut in VAT to 5% for property maintenance.

During the last recession the UK construction industry lost over 500,000 skilled jobs and TrustMark feel that cannot allow that to happen again. Therefore the Government needs to heed the calls from both politicians and industry and start delivering policies that will help the construction industry survive this recession.
